

→ AIID MOVES INTO NEW FOUNTAIN HILLS FACILITY

The American Institute of Interior Design recently relocated from an outdated space it occupied for the past 23 years and is now in a new facility in Fountain Hills. The $1M (suite value and tenant improvement) 4,400 SF project was developed by GMK Building and Development. General contractor was George Kasnoff and architect was Colin Edward Slais. The school design merges classical with contemporary styling in an open floor plan that includes cement flooring, a reflected ceiling plan sculpted at four heights and 37 panorama view windows.

The AIID's recent relocation in Fountain Hills included $1M in tenant improvements.
